The prisoner age did not deny having poured kerosine on the sails and set fire to them, but and he did so not with the intent of burning the surpy but of securing for himself a hearing with respect to certain wrongs he alleged he had been subjected to. It appeared he had already had a hearing before the United States Consul, but he was dissatisfied with the decision then arrived at, and hence he took the extraordinary course of setting fire. not to the ship, but to the sails in the hold. It is important to bear in mind this distinction, for it was this that led to his acquittal, it being held, apparently, that al though a person may not set a ship on fire he may set on fire anything contained in a ship. The section of the Ordinauce under mer Honam was obliged to put back owing to which the prisoner was indicted provides i that - "Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously set fire to, east away, or in anywise! destroy any ship or vessel, whether the came be complete or in an unfinished state, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted under which the second count was laid. provides that a person attempting to set fire to a ship as above shall likewise be guilty of felony.
